Cookie policy

Last updated September 2026

What our website stores on your device and why.

At a glance

- Our website doesn't use advertising, analytics or tracking cookies, so there's no cookie banner to click through.
- Your basket is saved in your browser so it's still there when you come back. It isn't sent to us until you check out.
- Cloudflare, which hosts the website, may set a security cookie to protect it from bots and attacks.
- When you pay, you go to Stripe's secure checkout, which uses its own cookies to process your payment and prevent fraud.

What cookies are

Cookies are small files that websites save on your phone or computer. Websites can also store information in your browser in similar ways, such as local storage. This policy covers both.

What our website uses

- Your basket: saved in your browser's local storage so items stay in your basket between visits. It stays until you check out, empty your basket or clear your browser data. It isn't shared with anyone.
- Security: Cloudflare, which hosts our website, may set a short-lived cookie to tell real visitors apart from bots and protect the site from attacks. It doesn't identify you or track you.
- Contact form spam check: when you send a message through our contact form, Cloudflare Turnstile checks it isn't spam.
- Payments: when you check out, you're taken to Stripe's secure payment page. Stripe uses its own cookies there to process your payment and prevent fraud. See Stripe's privacy policy for details.

We don't use advertising, analytics or social media tracking cookies.

Why there's no cookie banner

UK law only requires us to ask for consent before using cookies or similar technology that isn't strictly necessary. Everything our website uses is needed to provide the basket, checkout and security you rely on, so no consent banner is needed. If we ever add analytics or other non-essential cookies, we'll ask for your consent first and update this policy.

Managing cookies

You can block or delete cookies and stored data in your browser settings. If you clear your browser data, your basket will be emptied. Blocking Stripe's cookies may stop you completing a payment.
